

The new Cafeteria in the Max-Eyth-school

I am a pupil of the Max-Eyth-school and I want to tell you something about our new cafeteria. Last Thursday it opened and there were already some impressive pictures in the newspaper a few days before.

When you look at the architecture the whole building is a mixture of new and old stile.

When you look at it from the outside there are remains of the Zeughaus with the new cafeteria inside.

Its very formidable. When you go inside its looks very good, because the floor, you are walking over looks like a bridge. The design and the colour have a lot of old stile. The walls are white with a few stones in between and the ground is brown. The room is split in two floors. On the top of the floor there are two vending machines one with something to drink and one with something to eat. Furthermore there are lot of chairs and tables. When you are going downstairs there is a wall full of windows. There you can look through the old ruin. On the ground floor is an employee, who sells fresh things like fruit, biscuit and other things to eat. The price is ok, not too expensive. In my opinion it's a very premium building.

Written by Mario Köhler 12FOE1